

Eulogy to a friend, and free sessions to those with cancer, May 5, 2019

A colleague, a friend, died last night after battling cancer for several years. She was a light at the school where I work as a full-time professor, giving of her time and her passion, her caring for us shining through.

Thank-you for your life. I am sorry that you had to bear so much pain and many trials during your path to death.

I cried; I am crying now as I write. I blame myself, because I believe there is another way that could have helped, and I could not find the words to persuade you to give it a try. How can I convince people that the methods I am using could help treat their cancer? Only with research.

If you have cancer, and are willing to try something new, please contact me. I will provide free sessions to research clients in my private practice. Thank-you. Please let others know about this offer.
